HANDOUTS

For printing, cutting out and handing out. The footer of each page says which mission a handout belongs to and where the group finds it; if two small sheets are on one page, the find site is under each sheet. The game master hands out a handout when the group finds the clue, not before. Everything written in Swedish or Norwegian between 1947 and 1978 has been translated into English; the customs transit document and the obituaries remain in the language of their time. Tip: print on heavier paper and cut out along the dashed line. The papers of the forties and fifties can be aged with cold tea, the printouts from 1977 stay fresh.

The Collegium confirms the handover to the recipient. The recipient confirms receipt of the crate with their signature. The waybill is returned to the sender after receipt.

RECEIPT

25 March 1947

14 March. Cardiff. Six crates, two lorries, eight men. Doyle counts the backs. The crates whisper. Louder at night. The men sleep next to them and say nothing. One cries in his sleep.

15 March. The crate from the Chamber is warm.
Holloway handed it over herself, with both hands. She did not pray.

17 March. London. Marsh has papers. The waybill bears four letters. Nobody explains them. I do not ask.

To Detective Inspector Viktor Hallström
Stockholm, Vasastan

Dear Mr Hallström,

You have kept a file for eight years that your superiors closed. We know about it. We also know what you saw in Solberg in December 1938. You are not alone.

We are an organisation without a name. On this envelope is an abbreviation that you are seeing for the first time. We ask you for a conversation. Bring your file with you. We offer you a position, not just a job.

The bearer of this letter does not know what it contains.
Do not ask him.

REPORT TO THE REGISTRY, STOCKHOLM
KIRUNA, SUMMER 1952
SUBJECT: DOGS IN KIRUNA MISSING FOR WEEKS

DOGS HAVE BEEN MISSING IN KIRUNA FOR WEEKS.
NO FINDS. NO TRACES.
PEOPLE SAY THE DOGS WENT INTO THE MOUNTAIN.

Kiruna, February 1953

On 4 February 1953, a tunnel was discovered in the mine near Kiruna that is not on any plan. The tunnel lies less than a hundred metres from the silent cavity that was found in 1947. The Collegium sent two Thaumaturges. The escort numbered fourteen men, including myself.

The tunnel is warm. Fresh crystals sit on the walls like ice. In the tunnel we found dogs, altered, with crystals in their fur. The dogs attacked when we touched the crystals. They recovered from gunshots, only fire stopped them. The bullets passed through the thing in the wall without damage.

Something stood in the wall. It was already awake. It did not speak as long as no one spoke. One of the Thaumaturges drew a circle, stayed inside it, answered. The thing turned to him. The Door closed with him on the other side.

Three of fourteen men survived. Own losses: eleven men, one Thaumaturge of the Collegium. None were recovered.

The mask of grey crystal was found in the tunnel.

Ashgrove

Thomas Ashgrove

Eleven. I do not write down the names.

I know them. Every single one.

And the Thaumaturge of the Collegium.

I do not know his name.

I should have asked.

The compass no longer points north.

It points to rifts.

It was already awake.

12 March 1953.

Kiruna is closed. The file is grey.

It will turn red when we understand what was there.

From tomorrow, every oddity gets a file. A white one.

Grey files go directly to the Council.

I did not touch the mask from the tunnel.

The report about the dogs from Kiruna I set aside in summer 1952. That belongs in the file, but not in the report.

The transport is complete. All forty-eight crates are locked in the new archive. The foreign service took the wrong trail. The illusion was held by the Lavigne sisters. On the fourth morning one was missing. The other calls herself Margot. I ask that the name of the other not be kept in any file. She is not dead. She went along. With the lorries. Into the forest. I know no more. The cooperation between the Operations Branch and illusionists has proven itself.

I am a precognitive of the Choir. What I write is not jealousy. It is a premonition, and it has been the same for three months.

I see a hall under the mountain. Forty people in a circle, without helmets. At the door a soldier looking at his watch.

When forty psions sit in a circle without helmets, I see three dead, seven burned out, and a sentence someone will say after waking.

I have no proof. I only have what I see.

Kjære Arne,

I hope you are warm. It has been snowing here for three days, and the children ask every evening when you are coming. Ola painted a picture at school, a house in the snow with an antenna. He says that is your house.

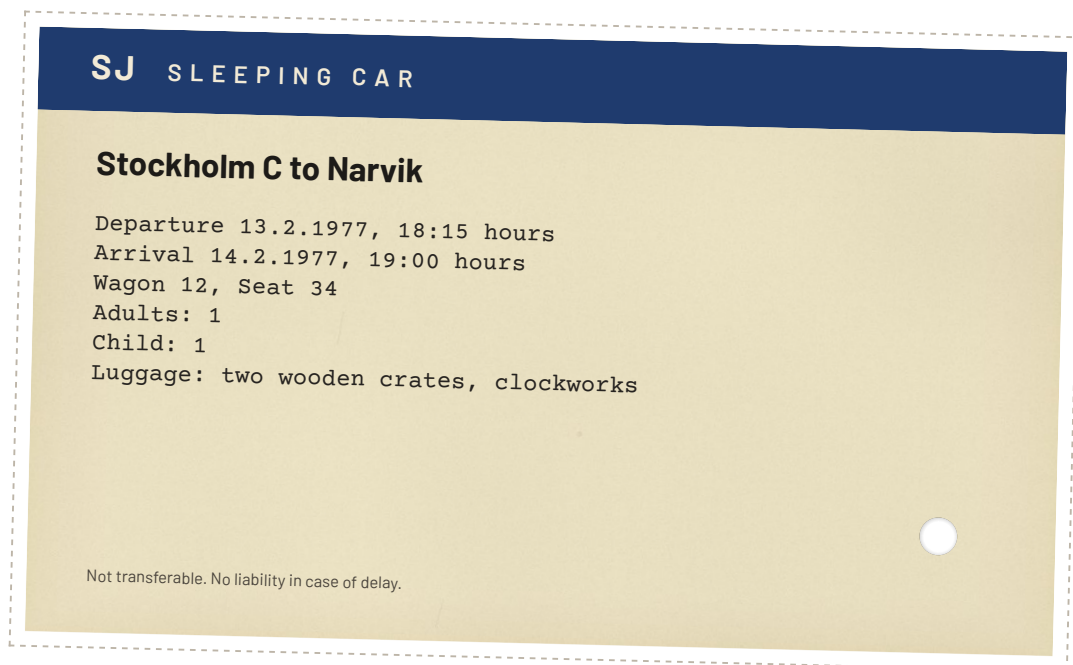

Yesterday I was down at the harbour. The lights over the fell were greener than ever, people say.

I miss you. I wish you were here. Come soon.

Your Turid

The ticking is gone. It always ticked, twenty-three years, every minute. Now it is gone. The stone is grey, from the middle outwards. Cold. I took it out of the watch pocket. It is no heavier than before. It is empty.

22:10

I checked the clockworks. All have stopped. The clock in the compartment has stopped. Only Ingrid's pocket watch ran, a whole night in under a minute. I did not take it away from her. She is asleep.

The train is standing still. Outside in the dark lies the mine.

Narvik, 4 o'clock. Nordlicht does not answer. I knew it before the man on the telephone said anything.

Nordlicht. The clocks stand at ten past ten. In Wales it was ten past ten as well.

I have read the search party's report. Haugen writes like a soldier. He counts the backs, the cups, the crystals. He does not write what he heard. I do not ask him about it.

The eleven read the seventh circle. Holloway read it in 1959. She went through the Door. This time I went. That is not the same.

I start a new folder: the Black File Nordlicht. I put the comparison of the two times inside. It stays in Stockholm. Not in the Wall. In the steel cabinet, in the second compartment, with Notebook Zero, the page from 1871 and Sander's letter of 1957. I lock both locks.

For twenty years I searched for murderers. I never searched for the dead. Now I search for the dead. I do not know if I want to find them.

I do not write down what I heard. Not on this night. Not in this book.

Nordlicht, 20 February 1977.

The clocks stand at 22:10. All the clocks. The wall clock in the canteen. The alarm clocks in the dormitories. The stopwatch in the workshop. The time clock on the generator. The clock in the radio set. All show 22:10. None ticks.

The crystals are grey. 212 of them. Catalogued, packed, in their places. The little lead boxes are cold.

The cups are still warm. Ten are half full. One is not. I have not touched the cups. I have had them measured. The temperature is the same. 31 degrees. After six days.

Addendum, 23 February: 412 pages of readings. The last sentence of the report reads: 'The readings are consistent with an event for which there is no measurement.'

I went into the canteen alone. I stood in front of the wall clock. Seven minutes. I took my own watch off my wrist and laid it on the table. I left it there. It showed 22:10.

We measured something that cannot exist, and it measured us.

Dear Sir or Madam,

My husband, Arne Kvalvik, worked as a radio operator at your weather station near Narvik. He wrote to me every week. His last letter is dated 10 February 1977. In it he writes that the winter is long and that he is looking forward to the summer. He writes that he loves me.

In May 1977 I was told he had died when the fishing boat went down off Tromsø. I was given a coffin. I was not allowed to open it.

I have many questions. Why did my husband work on a fishing boat when he was a radio operator? Why has the company never spoken to me? Why do you not write back to me?

I am waiting for your answer.

Yours faithfully

Turid Kvalvik

Dear Mrs Kvalvik,

We have received your letter. We understand your grief and your questions.

Mr Kvalvik was a valued employee. His work on the fishing boat was part of a special assignment for the company. We regret that we cannot give you any further information.

The circumstances of the accident have been established. The competent authorities have closed the case.

We wish you strength and peace.

Yours sincerely
